SLEEK & CHIC

double in size, and an abundance of glass for an indoor-outdoor feel. "Our previous home was much more traditional, and we also own a hundred-year-old house in Roslyn, so we wanted this new build to be contemporary and current," Jeff says. "We're the house where people tend to congregate, and now it's much more functional for the way we live."

The only sticking point: the pool, which couldn't be moved due to zoning regulations. But the pool's close proximity to the house ended up being a blessing in disguise. "The strong relationship between the pool and the house is actually something you'd find on St. Barth, where the Rubins love to visit," comments Ceglia. "It has the feel of the island, but in a subtle way."

Inside, Ceglia balanced Jeff's penchant for minimalism with Stefanie's desire for character and warmth. "Billy really understands our personalities and our family's needs," says Stefanie, acknowledging the thoughtful, polished mix of contemporary, custom, and vintage pieces. And no surface is too precious, with a focus on performance fabrics and durable materials that can keep up with the wear and tear of beach-house living. "It's a very easy home to be in," she adds. "People are constantly in and out of the pool, and we never have to worry about dripping swimsuits." ✨

Contemporary Cool

(OPPOSITE TOP) Ipe wood adds interest along the home's front façade and roofline. (OPPOSITE BOTTOM) The new structure was designed around an existing pool that couldn't be relocated.
