Janus et Cie

Attention, Shoppers!

Garden gurus at Janus et Cie are going on the grid in a big way. Last month the company launched its e-commerce Web site (janusetcie.com) that eliminates the middleman and allows consumers to shop directly for garden and home accessories without ever having to step foot in the showroom. Treasures big and small, like this spectacular bone china teapot, are great finds you can discover online.

Novogratz

It's not surprising that the Novogratz husband-and-wife design team that juggles a design firm, blog, and successful television career—oh, and seven children—can whip up a furniture collection in their spare time. Which is exactly what the duo did for Crate & Barrel's younger sister CB2 (cb2.com). The line consists of traditional shapes, like this take on the Louis XV armchair, but at $399, the price allows you to live like a king.

Scents & Feel

Get Thrown

On a mission to better the basics, designer Jenny Haik of Scents & Feel (scentsandfeel.com) created the multitasking "fouta." The handwoven, 100 percent cotton luxury bath towel understudies several starring roles, including a throw, tablecloth, bed cover, and even shawl. Available in an array of patterns and styles, foutas make great housewarming gifts. Throws shown are $69–$80 each. —Clara Haneberg

Reborn Relics

Frustrated by a void in the marketplace, Arkansas decorator Debi Davis (danddiinteriordesign.com) set off to create a line of furniture and home accessories with an old-world look and feel. She amassed a collection of antique architectural elements that she casts and marries with pre-existing solid wood or hand-carved pieces. Add an antique finish and some distress, and voilà—a relic reborn!

Champalimaud

A champion of classically luxurious interiors, designer Alexandra Champalimaud teamed up with The Rug Company (therugcompany.info) to create a line of hand-knotted Nepalese rugs influenced by her travels and love of decorative arts. "I gravitate toward the integrity and unpretentious style of patterns and designs that are centuries old," she explains. "These two patterns were inspired by carved stones I found while traveling around India."
